Hi. I work in retail and there is already long enough trading hours for people to do their shopping. We also offer online shopping where people can get it delivered right to their door. Retail staff have a life as well and don't need to be there until all hours just in case a few people forget to do their shopping. They will find plenty of take away places open if they really are that desperate. Why do people need to shop every day anyway? They only do it because they can. If the trading hours increase then there would be even less staff in the stores than there already is because we all know that the wage budgets are not going to increase along with the trading hours. Please think about the retail staff and just plan your shopping for when the store is open.
