I feel in Australia there is a significant lack of competition. It's bad enough to exist financially on a weekly basis. We are known world wide as being an expensive country to live in. There is no need for just two major supermarkets to service 23 million people! Cars and electronics are well over priced, as are houses. I believe increased competition will provide more jobs, better standards, and more affordable prices. Competition is good! Australia is where the UK was 20 years ago. The UK was also very expensive, but due to competition and 'price wars' between supermarkets (as an example), has benefitted the consumer in many ways, and above all prices have come down. As Australian's we are totally fed up of being ripped off and having a limited choice. Sometimes I feel Australia is like living in a communist state. Let's move forward with the rest of the ! developed world and allow increased competition and market forces lead the way.
