"If Singapore and London could direct-charge road users why couldn't Australia, he asked."

I find this sort of thinking deplorable, what do we pay Taxes for? what do we pay Car Registration for?

Is Car registration going to be abandoned? If not why not?

The Australian abysmal Public Transport system in major Cities needs to be upgraded significantly before this sort of madness is even considered.

To compare Singapore and London with Australian cities is madness, the land mass in Singapore or London is a insignificant fraction of land mass compared to Australian cities, and significantly London and Singapore have a very effective underground rail system, WE DO NOT.

The mere suggestion of this cost of living blowout should stay locked away in the Lunatic File.
