Hopefully competition rules are considered carefully. For instance, having a grocery shop in a suburb and allowing another selling grocery within walking distance of each other is not competition. It is one business taking another's. Regarding the liquor licence, there have already been granted too many. If supermarkets are allowed to sell alcohol with restrictions, bottle shops around ought to be closed. In this case, one warehouse per city could sell wholesale to customers and accept empty containers back. They could also deliver to households.

Any Imports into Australia should be carefully looked at and restricted when needed.
